Students will gain insight into key concepts such as brand strength and brand value, and will learn the importance of using the entire brand organization to create and sustain brand equity. One of the key objectives for this course is that students gain experience with the subject matter by working on a team project. The deliverables for this project is a complete brand development plan – based on a real business case – which will require both an understanding of branding theory and the ability to structure and analyze marketing problems.
8. Course contents	Competition in most consumer markets is becoming more intense, but demand is not necessarily increasing. In order to compete successfully, organizations – whether private business, governmental institution, educational institution etc. – must learn

	how to attract both the most profitable customers and the brightest minds. One of the most valuable resources in brand organizations is intellectual capital: the people in the organization and the culture that ties them together. Acknowledging that the vital link in successful branding is between the organization and its customers, this course employs both an outside-in perspective (the traditional customer-brand view) as well as an inside-out perspective (organization – brand). The course emphasizes both the traditional concepts of successful branding: awareness, associations, positioning, loyalty etc., as well as the organizational factors necessary to compete in today’s markets: leadership, intellectual resources, and organizational culture. The course will provide students with the skills and tools necessary to develop a plan for creating a brand and communicating it successfully to both customers and employees.
9. Method of instruction	The course will be taught through lectures and in-class discussions. Students should be prepared to share their experiences and opinions, ask questions, and respectfully disagree with both the teacher and their fellow classmates when they see fit. We will use a variety of classroom activities, including both individual and group presentations.
